4. BACKGROUND

Reagan National and Dulles International are operated by the Metropolitan Washington Airports Authority with day to day on-site management responsibilities overseen by the Airport Manager. In the course of managing the Airports, the Airport Manager makes many operational decisions which are designed to ensure the safety, health, and convenience of Airport passengers, individuals working at the Airports and other persons who provide services to passengers or otherwise participate in the Airports Authority's transportation function.

There are certain activities and types of behavior which, when undertaken by persons within the terminals, concourses, pedestrian bridges and tunnels connecting the terminals to the Airport parking garages, can interfere significantly with the operations of the Airports and their ability to serve the travelling public, and can adversely affect the nature and quality of the passenger experience at the Airports. Moreover, these activities and types of behavior often occur when individuals spend time at the Airports for purposes entirely unrelated to the air transportation purpose of these facilities.

5. POLICY
